The A3098G variant in the melanocortin-1 receptor gene is associated with the risk of developing bipolar disorder.

Melanocortin-1 receptor (MC1R) is a G protein-coupled receptor for adrenocorticotrophic hormone and alphamelanocyte stimulating hormone that plays an important role in the regulation of the central nervous system.

Abnormalities in the MC1R gene have been reported to be implicated in bipolar disorder (BD) and schizophrenia. Here, we investigated the association between the A3098G variant in the MC1R gene and BD in a Chinese population. Eighty-five patients with BD and 100 unrelated healthy controls

What's New in the?

Induction of reciprocal cross-reactive T cell responses to Mycobacterium tuberculosis antigens in cynomolgus monkeys infected with Mycobacterium tuberculosis. Little is known about the development of anti-mycobacterial immunity and the quality of immunogenicity of antigens in natural hosts other than humans. A novel model of tuberculosis (TB) in which cynomolgus macaques are infected with Mycobacterium tuberculosis (Mtb) was developed. At 2 months postinfection, cross-reactive CD4⁺ T cells (T-cell epitopes) to Mtb antigens (espA, nrdE, phoP, and acs) were induced in the PBMCs of infected monkeys. In-vivo homing and trafficking of T cells from lymph nodes to the lung was determined by microscopic techniques. Reciprocal T-cell reactivity and homing of these T cells suggests that the induction of cross-reactive T-cell responses plays a role in protection against M. tuberculosis in the natural hosts.
