Q: How can I install a windows application on boot to a specific user account automatically? I'm on Linux Mint (openSUSE), and I want to install some windows applications on it, but I need them to be installed to a specific user account, the one that logs in automatically at each login. I've tried using the Startup Applications, but that didn't work for me. A: There's no way to install system wide to a specific user automatically. Startup Applications are used to execute commands on Login. Instead, you can put the.exe files in your.config/autostart folder. Be careful, because you may introduce some havoc in your system, if you run your programs.
