I would like to know if there is a way to avoid running out of memory when using a large list (by large, I mean about 100,000 items). I used the Collections.sort() method with a custom comparator function, but in this function, I use local variables inside the loop so it will be created each time the loop is evaluated. I'm using Eclipse Kepler Service Release 1, 64-bit

This is the code import java.util.*; public class Tester { public static void main(String[] args) { List locationList = new ArrayList(); Location location1 = new Location(100001, "Location 1"); Location location2 = new Location(100010, "Location
