For more details, visit AutodeskQ: Number of ways to choose 3 of 6 toys from 6 toys where exactly one toy belongs to each person In a party, there are 6 toys in the cupboard. 3 of the toys belong to each person. In how many ways can these 3 toys be chosen? I know that when we have k toys, and we have n persons, then there are $n \choose k$ ways to choose. But, this question is not the same as the usual 3 of 6 question. This is because, there is 1 toy that belongs to 1 person and the rest of the toys do not. So, the total number of ways to choose 3 of 6 toys (where exactly one toy belongs to each person) is $$\frac{6 \choose 3}{6 \choose 1} \cdot \frac{6 \choose 1}{6 \choose 1} \cdot \frac{6 \choose 1}{6 \choose 1}$$ Since, the number of ways to choose 3 of 6 toys where all the 3 toys belong to the same person is $\frac{6 \choose 3}{6 \choose 1}$. So, my question is, why the 3 toys belonging to 1 person should come after the rest of the toys do not? A: There are $\binom 6 3$ ways to choose 3 toys, then $\binom 6 1$ ways to choose one of the first 3, and finally $\binom 6 1$ ways to choose which of the remaining three the last one is to be chosen from. Free radical-mediated modification of DNA by Fe3+-citrate complexes: correlation of DNA reactivity with DNA adducts. State of the Union address to a joint session of Congress on Capitol Hill Tuesday, and the numbers were in line with his overall approval ratings. The President boasted of economic growth and low unemployment, but outlined proposals for further job creation, expanding Social Security and student debt relief. The incumbent president may have left Washington last week, but his fingerprints remain on the federal policy agenda. Some of his proposals already are law. On January 7th, the President signed the America Invents Act into law, bringing about long-awaited reform of the patent system. This was no small matter, since the act would impact the way technology companies like Apple, Google and Amazon design, produce, market and sell their products. Apple already had agreed to a new pact with the Justice Department, which called for a two-year deferment in the company's case against a Google Android competitor, a company named Motorola. On January 4th, the Supreme Court struck down the centerpiece of President Barack Obama's Affordable Care Act. The controversial "individual mandate" was nullified when the Court unanimously ruled that requiring all people to buy health insurance was not constitutional. Obama's plan to overhaul the American health care system was not new. The landmark legislation, passed in 2010, was sold to the public as a way to bring costs down and increase coverage for all Americans. Originally, the President had proposed a plan where everyone would be required to buy health insurance or pay a penalty. Under the current law, insurance companies must accept anyone who buys coverage, and the young and healthy must subsidize the old and the sick.namespace N2.Definitions { /// /// A collection of s /// public interface IFieldDefinitions : IEnumerable { /// /// Gets the number of elements in the collection. ///
