The study, which was published online today in the Proceedings of the National Academy of Sciences, reveals a fundamental sex difference in female sex drive: Women are less attracted to men than men are to women. "Until now, it was largely assumed that men are more sexually driven than women," said study author Dr. Todd K. Prevelt, professor of psychiatry and radiology. "So this study shows that this isn't so." In a series of experiments at the Nebraska Medical Center, the scientists probed the idea that women are not really as interested in sex as men 3e33713323
