The experience with a new strategy for teaching patients with end stage renal disease to live with a kidney transplant is described. We developed a new model of patient education for patients with end stage renal disease awaiting transplantation and their families. The model integrates patient education with family support and medical management. We have used this method in more than 2,200 patients with end stage renal disease since 1979. More than 50% of patients are currently living independently and with their families after a kidney transplant, and 65% are working or seeking employment. Patients who are unable to live independently after transplantation are receiving in-home dialysis. Patients who have failed their first transplant after a period of home dialysis are usually referred for additional transplantation, and more than 85% of patients with a second transplant do well. Current results have exceeded our expectations in all areas. This new educational paradigm includes closer patient management, improved patient satisfaction, and an increase in patient independence and activity.
