One of the most high profile of these is the return of the protectionist state. Even The Economist recently ran a piece titled "Compete with America, Try Trade." [E]verybody has a general notion that in certain ways Chinese manufacturers produce things much cheaper than American companies. But the higher share of exports in Chinese manufacturing is not the whole story. Since the early 1990s, Chinese manufacturers have also undertaken an import substitution strategy. By focusing more on producing inputs such as intermediate goods rather than final products, they have squeezed domestic consumers from whom they buy inputs. Their success in manufacturing intermediate goods has been even greater. When thinking about the potential effects of protectionism, it is helpful to consider the decline in trade-reliant sectors as a percentage of GDP. In this chart from a recent report by the International Monetary Fund, the share of manufactures as a percentage of GDP has fallen. As this chart shows, this trend has been particularly pronounced in developed countries. In the U.S., the share of
