Straightforward extension that allows you to comfortably view online videos Installing this add-on only requires you to visit the dedicated section for Opera extensions and themes. Like most other extensions, once installed, the add-on makes its presence known by integrating itself with Opera's top section, on the right side of the address bar. From this point forward, you can effortlessly get right of the distracting backgrounds while watching videos on YouTube or other similar platforms with a simple mouse click on the aforementioned icon. There are customizable add-ons, and then there's Turn Off the Lights The default settings of the extensions should be just right for most users but, considering the multitude of available configuration options, it would really be a shame not to at least give them a try. From the add-ons Settings section, you can conveniently tweak the color for dimmed background and the level of opacity. What is more, you can replace the background with an image of your choosing or fiddle about with the few, yet interesting options for dynamic background. You can customize your watching experience even more by enabling some of the provided visual gimmicks like fade-in and fade-out effects. There's even a useful Night Mode, specially designed to make sure that there's not much strain on your eye while watching videos in dark environments. Improve your YouTube cinematic experience with the help of this useful add-on All in all, if Opera is your main companion for watching videos on the Internet, then Turn Off the Lights for Opera is probably one of the most useful extensions you can install. Not only is this add-on easy to install and even easier to work with but probably the most noteworthy thing about it is just how many customization options it offers. Last but not least, you should know that Turn Off the Lights also comes with support for other, popular web browsers out there, namely Google Chrome, Mozilla Firefox and Safari, just to name a few.
