UK considers EU competition rules UK government is considering tightening rules on competition policy in the UK, according to news reports and business sources. The move is part of the government's review of the EU's single market rules and would bring UK competition law more closely in line with EU rules, the Guardian reported. The government's review is expected to be launched in mid-2007 and could be completed by 2008. The Times quoted the paper as saying that the government is "considering changes to the British Industrial Strategy consultation, which would require businesses to explain how they plan to participate in state aid investigations." EU states and the commission can demand that an EU company's plans for nationalising a carmaker or bank being investigated for state aid are examined. Under EU rules, the commission can launch an investigation into state aid. If it does, it can demand information from the company under investigation. EU state aid rules have come under increasing public pressure in the EU and in the UK in particular, with calls for ministers to provide the commission with more tools to deal with state aid. Among the Tories, Cameron last month opposed calls by the Tories' George Osborne, UK business secretary, for the government to consult on tougher state aid rules, according to the Guardian. Cameron has promised to take a "surgical approach" to EU reform and to go only where there are "broad agreement". The current state aid rules are based on the original 1974 TAC state aid rules and they have long been criticised for being too complicated and confusing, the Guardian added. In its report on the EU's state aid rules, TUC in May called for the government to replace the current UK TAC state aid rules with new single market rules that would simplify and clarify the EU rules. ( Concerns about stricter state aid rules

What's New In EZWeather?

View the forecast and other information about current conditions by using this utility. With this program you can view up to 4 different weather conditions-temperature, temperature, precipitation and wind. The program also offers a function that shows the forecast by city, state, country, or zip code. How to get Setup The setup is quite easy; just download the zipped file from the link below, extract it and run the EZWeather.exe program. You can click the link below to download it from MySofts website- EZWeather Reviews : (posted in the April, 2008 version) There are a lot of things that this program does that you just don't find in other programs. First, it displays the current and forecast weather conditions for up to four different locations. You can choose between a specific location, the United States (US), Canada, Mexico, or the United Kingdom. Then there is the system tray, which is a handy feature that just about every program should have. It displays important information such as the current weather conditions, the temperature, wind speed and direction and it can be activated if you want the weather information to be displayed 24/7. Finally, the program offers an option to show the forecast by city, state, country or zip code. This option lets you view the forecast for another city, not just a different state. And this feature is great when you are trying to decide where to go for a vacation. The price of this program is $24.95, but the software is easily worth the amount you have to pay. You get a lot of features and the program is fairly easy to use. The software updates from AccuWeather.com so the information you are looking for is always fresh. In sum, this program offers a lot of features for the price and it comes in multiple languages. - J. A. J.
