NADH-supported oxidative phosphorylation in myocardium. Development of permeabilized cell system from rabbit heart. A reliable permeabilized cell system was established from rabbit heart using the detergent Triton X-100 and the detergent polymer polyethylene glycol. The system was then used to study the respiration of permeabilized myocardial cell. The system is free from endogenous substrates and respiratory inhibitors and is able to oxidize

NADH. Substrates added to this medium could enter the cell. The system was established and the metabolic properties investigated by measuring the respiratory rates as a function of State 3 and State 4 and the membrane potential ($\Delta\psi$) generated by the respiratory chain. The respiratory rates and $\Delta\psi$ values were linear for at least 10 min. It is concluded that this system is appropriate for studying the kinetics and mechanisms of oxidation of various respiratory substrates.
Q: Python re: check if string contains only characters and numbers I am trying to parse files for strings with only numbers and characters. The goal is to find lines like: 8y9l1 1 8y9l98 98 8y9l15 15 8y9l156 156 I currently have: pattern = re.compile(r'\d+') f = open(filename) for line in f: match = re.match(pattern, line) if match: print('yes') However, this is returning "yes" even for the string "81y9l" (where 8 and 9 are numbers). I can also just extract the numbers from the string, run them through a function to see if they are a valid IP address, but I want something that I can apply to all strings of any length. A: You don't need regular expression for such a simple case. Here's one idea with two regular expressions for parsing the numbers and the letters: import re strings = ['8y9l1 1', '8y9l98 98 3da54e8ca3
