[MG28] Kaichou wa Maid-sama!
(2010) [BD 720p 10bit].

[MG28] .An epidemiological study of the complaint of pain during spinal block. A total of 248 patients at a hospital were asked a structured questionnaire with 4 questions about spinal block as a pain-inducing intervention and whether they had any pain after the intervention. All the patients assessed their pain with the aid of a visual analog scale. In only 33% of the patients did the pain extend into the very much or extremely much part of the scale. The most common reported pains were those of the legs and lower back (35%). There was a statistically significant correlation between duration of symptoms and the kind of pain.

The data were compared with results from a previous study, also carried out at the same hospital, in 1988. Although there was a decrease in the proportion of patients reporting severe or very severe pain, there was an increase in the proportion of patients reporting moderate or fairly severe pain.[Visceral leishmaniasis: making referrals to the infectious disease unit]. Visceral leishmaniasis (VL) is one of the most important neglected tropical diseases. It is a protozoan infection transmitted by the bite of sand flies. In the developed world, the control of VL relies on the use of an anti-leishmanial agent as a prophylactic treatment in the initial phases of infection, and the removal of the vector. In the developing world, in addition to prophylactic therapy, the focus is therapeutic, which requires that patients be referred to an infectious disease unit for hospitalisation in order to access this specialised therapy. Treatment at the endemic level is considered to be the most cost-effective way to control VL because it minimises the risk of progressing to visceral leishmaniasis, which can be fatal. Treatment is usually based on the use of antimonial compounds, but this has been shown to be variable in efficacy and can cause severe side effects. Promising new drugs are available but they are still unavailable in many countries where the disease is endemic. Therefore, it is imperative that the countries affected by VL participate in the research and development of new anti-leishmanial drugs. This must be done with the help of donor organisations and the pharmaceutical industry.
