Field of the Invention This invention relates to a sensor for measuring the concentration of hydrogen sulfide present in a gas.

More particularly, the invention is concerned with a solid electrolyte sensor having a plurality of catalyst layers which are sequentially deposited on a solid electrolyte so as to measure hydrogen sulfide concentration in a gas stream. The invention relates to the deposition of catalyst layers for hydrogen sulfide detection and also to methods of making, operating and sealing such sensors. 2.

Description of the Prior Art There is a need for a hydrogen sulfide concentration sensor which is effective over the entire ranges of hydrogen sulfide concentration that occur in industrial gas streams. Specifically, there is a need for a hydrogen sulfide sensor which is effective for both low concentration hydrogen sulfide concentrations (for example, those down to approximately 200 ppm) and high concentration hydrogen sulfide concentrations (for example, those above approximately 2000 ppm). Prior art hydrogen sulfide concentration sensors, such as that disclosed in U.S. Pat. No. 4,886,516, have proved to be ineffective in the low concentration range. Accordingly, there is a need for a hydrogen sulfide concentration sensor that is effective for the low concentration range. Also, there is a need for a hydrogen sulfide concentration sensor which is effective in the presence of high concentration acid gases, such as carbon dioxide and carbon monoxide. There is a further need for a hydrogen sulfide concentration sensor which is effective at high temperatures of use.

Specifically, there is
