Include a tutorial in your brand brochure or Web site. The end result doesn't have to look great—in fact, with the help of Photoshop, you can make something awful look quite good. But even if you think your product brochure or Web site has terrific visuals, including a few helpful Photoshop tutorials helps increase readership and captures their attention. Use Photoshop for logo design Photoshop has long been a standard tool in the logo designer's toolbox. With it, you can transform a basic logo into a one-of-a-kind design with all kinds of features, as shown in Figure 9-1. The following sections introduce and cover the Photoshop logo toolbox, starting with the basic tools that enable you to create a logo design. Figure 9-1: Photoshop has so many filters, effects, and tools that you can use to create a logo design that is well beyond the capabilities of most other programs. Start with the basics of icon-making with graphics editing The basic tools for making an icon in Photoshop are pretty powerful, but they're so basic that they're really not much more than point-and-click tools that are available on any graphics editor. You start with a smart object, and then you can add text and other objects to it. You can change the color of all of the individual objects on the smart object, as well as the background color. You can add a drop shadow or a reflection on the object. You can even add a gradient, which lets you change the color of the object in a cross-gradient pattern. Figure 9-2 shows just a couple of the things you can do with a smart object to give a graphic a more professional look. Figure 9-2: A smart object is basically a file that contains all the individual elements that make up an icon graphic. Use filters for extreme details Photoshop has dozens of filters that add polish to a graphic. You can create patterns, soften edges, and smooth out details in a graphic. You can use the Photoshop filters to add visual interest to a simple graphic and to give it special effect or artistic flair. After you apply the filters, you can save the filter layer as a Smart Object, which is a special way to save layers so that you can manipulate them later. The following sections introduce you to some filters that you can use in your brand messaging graphic. Some cool filters

ADVERTISEMENT "It is particularly unfortunate that Mr. Trump would so blatantly claim that the election is rigged against him. This is unbecoming of a candidate for president," Amy Dacey, the chief executive of the leading edge digital fundraising organization, said in a statement. "President Obama has stated more than once that he has full confidence in our electoral system and he has never voted for someone who wasn't the candidate he was voting for. I urge Mr. Trump to do the same," said Dacey. Clinton and her husband, former President Clinton, both have voiced confidence in the electoral system.Q: How do I pull a string from a file and check if it is in a list in Python? So I have a list of categories and a list of links to pages. categories = ['Food','Home','Drink'] links = ['food.html','home.html','drink.html'] What I want to do is retrieve a random link from the list of links. I made a loop that looks for the same category as the link in the list of links and if it does not exist it adds it to the end of the list so it will eventually randomize it. for i in links: for j in categories: if i == j: pass else: links.append(i) The problem is that it checks all the categories and adds every one to the links list. How can I only check if it is in the list of categories that I want. Thanks. A: Simplest way to do this is using random.choice() randindex = random.choice(links) randindex = str(randindex) link = links[randindex] or randindex = random.choice(

Just a few weeks ago, I wrote about how the End of Life Choices (EOLC) bill HB 2273 was making its way through the Kentucky legislature, how it would require that death certificates and medical records be sent to the state, but not to the decedent's family. It was designed to benefit the state in exchange for a pittance from the funeral home industry. I explained that it was an offense to the family, but not a crime, and as long as the state was paying out money they would see no harm in it. Well, as you know, the bill passed the Senate, but in the House of Representatives there was a great bit of drama over who would vote to concur on the amended bill in the House. Some thought the bill needed a number of procedural changes prior to a vote. Others thought that all the changes that had been made were fine, but needed to be placed in the House Rules Committee before being voted on. The original bill called for the records to be sent to the Commonwealth, but with the amendment in the rules committee, the records will be sent to the state only, but the family will be able to get a copy from the state. The original bill had specified that physicians could not disclose the cause of death in order for the physician to get paid for the service. This was part of the problem with the bill. I had a feeling that was part of the reason the House Rules Committee changed it to simply say the cause of death cannot be disclosed. If the funeral home industry is so worried about increasing requests for medical records, maybe they should lobby to eliminate the death certificate altogether. Why would anyone want the medical records of someone who has died? I, for one, don't want to know. If the death certificate isn't called a death certificate but is required to be sent to the state in order for the state to get the $500, then the state shouldn't be able to obtain it. After all, it isn't like the state is going to pay anything for sending it over. However, if the family did have a problem with the medical information, they could be assured by the confidentiality of doctor-patient privilege. But, for what reason? Would the state be able to use the medical information to help with its own legislation? Surely, the medical records would have to be anonymous to state bureaucrats, especially if the state has to pay out for the actual medical record. I suppose
