Carotenoids in some plants of the Brassicaceae family are important dietary factors in the etiology of human diseases such as cancer and cardiovascular diseases. Some of the cultivar hightail- (CH) and yellow color (CHY) genes of Brassica chinensis confer resistance against these diseases. The present studies explore the potential for commercialization of this germplasm as seed, food or feed and for development of breeding schemes for bettering the stability of the gene pool. One is a direct approach in which the genes conferring the disease resistance are introgressed onto B. napus, a major oilseed crop. The other is by interspecific backcross breeding between the normal (mesoyield) cultivar of B. chinensis and B. napus to produce viable and fertile offspring in the BC1 generation with the CH and CHY genes introgressed from the donor species. In addition, progress is being made in the restoration of the normal characteristics of B. chinensis, including fertility, pigment concentration, and disease resistance, into "normal" cultivars by means of plant cell and tissue culture techniques.

A: Both "think" and "think about" are common and idiomatic ways to say that you're thinking/imagining about something or about something. You can use them interchangeably.
