Many of them are of Filipino descent and there are also Filipinos from the Philippines who live in the Dominican Republic. Filipinos made up the third largest foreign community in the country, and Filipino was the third most spoken language in the country, accounting for about 2% of the overall population. As of 2018, there were an estimated total of 1,429,250 Filipinos in the Dominican Republic, comprising 1.04% of the total population. Dominican Republic passport As of 2003, the Philippines and the Dominican Republic were the only non-Commonwealth member countries to not have a passport sharing agreement. There were only five embassies and one consular post of the Republic of the Philippines in the Dominican Republic. As of that year, Filipinos wishing to enter the country or travel there had to first apply for a visa to the Embassy of the Dominican Republic in Manila. Filipinos are entitled to free diplomatic and consular services, like visas and passports. The Dominican Republic is also a major destination for Filipino migrant workers and Filipino émigrés. A large majority of Filipinos in the Dominican Republic are migrant workers, and their remittances from the Philippines represent approximately a quarter of the country's annual GDP. The largest sector of migrant workers coming from the Philippines is construction, although there are many other service-oriented industries that employ Filipinos, including hotel and restaurant service. The Dominican Republic has a high poverty level, and most Filipinos working in the country have jobs as housemaids or waiters in hotels, restaurants, and other service-oriented industries. Of the estimated total number of migrant workers living in the Dominican Republic, roughly half live in the central cities of Santo Domingo and San Pedro de Macorís. Over the years, Filipinos have left the Dominican Republic to find employment in other countries, and as of the late 2000s, there was a small, but growing population of Filipinos living abroad. Estimates about the number of Filipinos living abroad range from 5,000 1cdb36666d
