Cracked.com -4.5/5 » The Dark Eye series has been going strong for years and years, but that doesn't mean it can't compete in the action-RPG genre. After a few successful mobile releases, The Dark Eye: Legends of Aria returns to PC in the form of the first true fantasy RPG on PC. But Legends of Aria is a far cry from the traditional Dark Eye game. Instead of wandering through high fantasy landscapes on a quest to find the lost city of Aria, you're out to save someone. That doesn't seem like a big deal, however, as you'll almost immediately be using your magic to fight monsters, heal allies, and puzzle through some platforming elements to reach your goal. PCGamesN.com -3.5/5 At the end of the day, The Dark Eye: Legends of Aria is not a bad game. It is, however, not a very good one either. There are many flaws with the game. There is a noticeable framerate hitch from time to time, and the plot is pretty thin. Oh, it's not just a platformer. You also need to be a wizard to survive, and as such, battling monsters is an important part of the game. While at times it feels as if the game is trying to be too cute, there's really not a whole lot of chore to the whole thing. There are some niggles with the interface and bugs, but I'm not sure how much of those to blame on the game's title being translated into English. There is a good experience. It just isn't a very good one. .Gamesmash.3/5 The Dark Eye: Legends of Aria is a first-person dungeon-crawler. It's very similar to The Elder Scrolls: Legends, but with a more action focus instead of just RNG based quests. You will be able to explore a variety of environments in which you can fight in 3D and be able to combine your skills to gain an advantage. IGN.UK -3.5/10 I played through an early build of Legends of Aria and it's the kind of game I could easily see made by someone who is not a regular Bloodborne fan. It's visually pleasing and well-paced, but it's not quite up to the design standards of Dark Souls III or Bloodborne. There's no flying or falling off the edge of bff6bb2d33

Q: Firefox Extension: Click Event Question I have a simple question about browser event handling. How does the browser know that double click is needed on a link but not double click on a button or on an input field? I'm planning on doing something like this: ('#element').addEventListener('click', function() {}, false); So I don't want to have to check for the type of event. I will be using a single listener for all element types. I can do this for mousemove because the move event uses a different event. But I'm not sure of the best way to go about adding an eventlistener for click and double click. EDIT1: So the best way to do something like this: document.getElementById(id).addEventListener('click', function(e) {... } The problem is that I can't add click events that way because the real part of the code that I'm writing is not in a dom node but in a widget, an object itself. I wrote a class that inherits from HTMLElement and I was able to add a listener in one click listener: var base_html = window.document.documentElement; var myBox = new myWidget(); base_html.appendChild(myBox); var savedEvents = base_html.addEventListener('click', myBox.OnClickClick); To make double click work I had to do this: var base_html = window.document.documentElement; var myBox = new myWidget(); myBox.addEventListener('mousedown', function(e) { e.preventDefault(); }, false); var savedEvents = base_html
