HyperMotion Technology simulates all of the fluid movement and range of movement seen in the real world, including explosive acceleration and braking manoeuvres. This data is loaded into the game's engine in real-time, meaning that the game engine can detect and react to situations with increasing accuracy and fluidity. The introduction of this new technology means that FIFA Online 3 will be powered by Unreal Engine 4. Compared to the tech used on FIFA 19, this leap in technology means that developers will gain even more accurate, detailed and responsive gameplay. This will become especially apparent with goalkeepers, defenders and midfielders, who will be more reactive, alert and aware of their surroundings as a result. Fans will also enjoy more responsive animations when performing various on-the-ball actions, while improved ball physics will allow for more faithful ball control and play. "We are delighted to be working with EA Sports on such a high-profile title," commented Epic Games CEO, Tim Sweeney. "By employing Unreal Engine 4 and leveraging the power of our cutting-edge technology, we can offer FIFA Online 3 a significant leap in quality. This, combined with the HyperMotion technology, unlocks a world of potential for FIFA Online 3 that we can't wait to explore." EA Sports CEO, David Rutter, continued: "We're thrilled to be working with Epic Games to deliver a new generation of football that is deeply immersed in motion and is more responsive to the player in-game." Q: What is the meaning of "permission" in "I need permission"? In the context of practice sessions, phrases that include the words "authorize" or "permit" are often used to ask for an official's permission to do something. I have heard this "I need permission" in the context of music practice, but I have yet to find a comprehensive answer to explain why it is used in this way. What is the meaning of the phrase here? A: The two most common interpretations of "I need permission" are: "I need to check with the people who are in charge before I do [x]" "I don't know who to talk to about [x]" In this case the second interpretation makes some sense, since a "practice session" isn't part of a school or organization. So if you don't know who to talk to about organizing a
