HyperMotion Technology has a basic philosophy. It is about the same-old, same-old, but with added dynamism and enhanced responsiveness. Together with the hyper real-time physics engine, it allows you to experience action as it happens on the pitch. It offers new rendering techniques to give players a more realistic and dynamic representation. With the elimination of the perspective bias between feet and head, the player animation system can now handle all actions of the player from head to foot. A higher level of responsiveness means that players are able to move more fluidly on the pitch. It allows for more natural transitions of speed and direction. This new responsiveness works together with the new control system and passing options. To pass accurately, the player moves his or her feet directly over the passing option. To create the natural sensation of passing, feedback is left on the touchpad. By tapping the pad, you can feel the player execute the pass. The new control system is designed to allow the player to develop more natural movement. To control fast strikers with pinpoint accuracy, the player is able to tap their favourite shooting button. To allow players to control the pace of gameplay, new precision dribbling options, including options to a flick and snap are available. Being able to control the pace and direction of gameplay is further enhanced by an enhanced shooting mechanic. Players can gauge the power of their shots and accurately aim for the sweet spot. The enhanced shooting mechanic also makes it easier to release the perfect pass. At the top of the pitch, the player is able to select his or her preferred shooting option. The A.I. system is also improved. The focus is on player behaviour and personality in order to give players greater autonomy and individuality on the pitch. Each player in FIFA 22 comes with different attributes. Players run, jump, jump in mid-air, intercept a pass, shoot or dribble. Player choices are reflected in their appearance on the pitch. Each player has his or her own unique way of playing the game. The system includes over 250 animation movements and facial expressions. Players will even show their personality on the pitch by interacting with the ball. "FIFA 22's gameplay will be more fluid thanks to the use of HyperMotion technology, the enhanced control system, responsive running animations and an A.I. system that gives players choices," said Andrew Richardson, Director of Franchise and Gameplay. "Players will feel more like an extension
