* A History panel, which enables you to edit and go back to any previous edit, letting you view the original image and each edit that was applied, one at a time. You can also see the layer where a cut was created, for example. * A Channels panel enables you to view, create, and manipulate individual color layers that were used to construct the finished image. This is especially helpful when editing or enhancing objects in a multicolored image, such as a rainbow, flower, or sunset. * A Toolbox panel, which offers most of Photoshop's editing tools, can be found on the bottom portion of the screen.

The number of persons infected with hepatitis C virus (HCV) in the United States is estimated to be over 100,000 persons per year, with more than half of the new infections occurring in injection drug users. Transfusion and dialysis are also important methods of HCV spread, and these forms of transfer are associated with an increased risk of progression to chronicity. The "goal" of therapy is to achieve a sustained virologic response, typically defined as undetectable serum HCV RNA 6 months after the end of treatment. A wide range of combination therapies are available, many of which can be extremely effective. To date, the only predictors of response to the combination therapies is baseline HCV RNA levels and/or genotype, and, in most instances, the duration of treatment. Preliminary data from the current year indicate that the two most potent and active anti-HCV agents of the future, peginterferon and ribavirin, are also the most cost-effective for treating HCV. Currently, the allocation of anti-HCV therapies in the US is determined by cost, with the notable exception of the allocation of the current standard therapy, peginterferon and ribavirin, to persons with genotype 1 infection. The cost of therapy as well as the cost of HCV infection per se remains very expensive in the US. During the previous year, we published data indicating that a hypothetical two-year course of peginterferon and ribavirin, the current standard of care for genotype 1 patients, results in an annual cost of US$46,000 in the US, with a lifetime cost of treatment of US$721,000 if therapy is successful. On the other hand, preliminary data from the current year indicate that oral alfa-interferon therapy is cost-effective, with an incremental cost-effectiveness ratio of under $5000 per year of life saved for a 30% response. The overall goal of this proposal is to evaluate the incremental cost-effectiveness of alternative strategies for the treatment of HCV. Patients will be identified through various sources, including drug screens. Patients will be recruited for treatment if they are infected with a genotype 1 virus and have a high risk for HCV-related disease. The three alternative strategies will involve the use of alfa-interferon with or without ribavirin for 12 months, followed by alfa-interferon and ribavirin for 12 additional months. Cost-effectiveness will

Deletion of the AgMDH2 promoter in Saccharomyces cerevisiae confers high alcohol tolerance and increases the sugar utilization efficiency under aerobic conditions. AgMDH2 encodes a mitochondrial isoform of malate dehydrogenase (Mn-MDH) of Saccharomyces cerevisiae that is induced in cells grown in medium containing 3-5% alcohol. In order to study the in vivo function of the AgMDH2 gene, we constructed and analysed a deletion strain (mh1-3) that has an approximately 800bp truncation and a duplication of the promoter region of AgMDH2. The mh1-3 cells exhibited a much higher tolerance to ethanol than that of the wild-type (wt) strain, and the wt cells became more susceptible to ethanol as the growth medium was depleted of nutrients. These results suggest that the AgMDH2 gene is involved in the regulation of alcohol tolerance. In addition, AgMDH2, which is upregulated by both alcohol and glucose, enhanced the ethanol production when the cells were cultured aerobically. Therefore, the deletion of the AgMDH2 gene can be a useful method for improvement of ethanol productivity. It's time for a beauty from-the-bottom-up game of "telephone" (maybe on a phone call with Captain Kirk?), so before we try to track down any further updates on Star Fleet Command, we'll talk about the real-world beauty in question. The gorgeous Ms. Amy Mechele (whose home town is Ames, Iowa) graduated the same week Star Fleet Command was released (almost a year ago). Her graduation from Grinnell College, the all-male school in Grinnell, Iowa, was featured in the "Manly Men Wear Shorts" article on us. The cadet in the picture is her younger brother, Kris. He's also a "Manly Man," both in this photo and in the real world. In the real world, he's a senior at the University of Iowa. These two Mechelles (yes, "Mechele" is just one word) started out in the Iowa High School Girls All-Star Basketball Game, and then the Iowa girls' basketball team, and on to the Iowa Hawkeyes women's basketball team, the men's basketball team, and a summer
