In order to do so, I keep the view the camera is showing (80° horizontal angle) fixed. The camera also has an autofocus feature, but not the kind you would expect as I have to adjust it manually to focus each time I press the record button. I'm wondering if it's possible to get the FOV of the camera feed real-time (not in paused mode), so that I know if the current camera view is not covering the whole image on the screen (if the FOV is smaller than the screen's height), or even if it is covering the whole image (if the FOV is larger than the screen's height). I've looked at the documentation of AVFoundation, but I couldn't find a way to get this information. Is this possible, and if so, how? A: It looks like this isn't possible. The AVPlayer's metadata (metadata for AVPlayerItem) contains the information about the FOV, but this metadata can only be set after the video is recorded, 0cc13bf012

One last thing, I'm not asking for it to do anything exotic, just give a very simple task, one that will not take a while to complete and in no way more than a 60 seconds. A: Are you talking about a program that runs on the terminal and asks for some input of some sort, then does something with the input and then waits for more input? If you do, it's not a long command line app. It's a command line app, but it doesn't take a long time to process. If you're talking about a long command line app, they are called programs. In any case, the answers to your questions are: no, it's a program. yes, it's a command line app. maybe, depending on what the command line option is. For instance: If the command line app is named cat and there's a file named test.txt in your working directory with the single letter string "hi", then it will print the contents of the test.txt file. cat hi would print hello world because cat sees a file name, it expects one string of characters, and it sees three characters, "hi". If the command line app is named cat and there's a file named "test.txt" with a single character string "hi" in your working directory, then it will print the contents of the "test.txt" file. cat hi would print hi and it would exit the program. No, it doesn't run longer than 30 seconds. It's still a program. But if there's a program that runs for 30 seconds or longer, then you'd want to use a tester. You are here Stocks head for victory lap after the latest Wall Street rout It took just 60 seconds on Wall Street for stocks to retrace losses from Monday's triple-digit swings into the close.
