Prognosis of alcoholic sepsis: a retrospective study. This retrospective study was undertaken to determine whether the alcoholic sepsis syndrome (AS) is associated with an adverse prognosis, and to identify variables that may predict outcome. Eighty-six patients with alcoholic sepsis were followed for 1 year. There was no difference between the survivors and the nonsurvivors in the rate of re-intubation within 72 h, duration of ventilatory support or intensive care unit stay. However, outcome was more favourable in patients with mild or moderately severe AS, in those with altered mental status at presentation, and in patients who were not comatose at presentation, or who were not identified by their spouse as actively drinking alcohol when sick. Variables for predicting outcome of alcoholic sepsis should be considered in the context of underlying liver disease.Q: Calling functions with numbers in windows batch I'm trying to run an infinite loop in a windows batch file (under Windows 7) like this: set /a n = 1 :loop "h\tag\tag.exe" %n% "h\test\test.txt" if %n%==30 goto end set /a n = n + 1 goto loop :end Obviously the above doesn't work. But I was wondering if there is a way to call function in batch. Thanks, A: you should put :loop at the end of your code, as stated in the Wikipedia article about Batch Files : Functions are only allowed within a batch file if they end with a goto. The following code is a variant of the pseudocode you want to achieve : set /a n = 1 :loop "h\tag\tag.exe" %n% "h\test\test.txt" if %n%==30 goto end set /a n = n + 1 if %n% gtr 32 goto loop :end This looks like a security feature, to prevent people to try to extend your script with functions. Agder lens The Agder lens (Agderfjellet) is a long and narrow mountain pass in southeastern Norway. At in elevation, it separates the Romsdal county from the Møre og Romsdal county. The Absence of ionizing radiation in the B-cell repertoire of autoradiographic in situ hybridization experiments. A possible role of ionizing radiation in inducing mutations in the variable region genes of the heavy chain (VH) is examined by investigating the functional B-cell repertoire in mice exposed to low-level radiation before and/or during the production of single mutants of chimeric anti-surrogate light chain antibodies. Using the recombinase activity of Cre-loxP systems to ablate individual VH gene segments in otherwise unmarked mice, in situ hybridization (ISH) with complementary C gene probes allows the identification of cells without a VH gene segment. The results show that although low-level γ -irradiation results in major changes in the total VH repertoire in the liver, it has no effect on the in situ hybridization pattern, indicating that there is no effect on the V gene repertoire.The Steel Breeze We've been through colder and we've been through hotter. But no, as far as we're concerned, we've never seen anything to beat The Steel Breeze, from the North Island of New Zealand. One day, while waiting for a cargo ship, we were caught up in a tornado of wind that became so strong, it blew us away. We didn't even get to see where we came from, or where we were going, we had no idea. And we sure didn't know that the load of cargo containers we were riding in was probably a lot more powerful than the tornado. All we could do was cry, cower and play dead. There was a steel storm that blew past and blew us away. Remember that old saying about lightning and thunder? Well, it's easy to forget that there's lightning under the water, too. Thanks to the research conducted by Dr. Joseph W. Thompson of the University of Chicago, the world is now aware that there are far more monsters in the oceans than we ever dreamed. Some of these are lightless and silent. Others have electric auras and when they decide to move, they can be fatal. Dr. Thompson's team discovered that there are 6,000 tentacles hanging from every single jellyfish! And that's not all! An umbrella-shaped jellyfish is just the beginning of what we will find. There's an American school of thought that seems to think we should all worship the jellyfish. They should! Jellyfish are not only
