Ephrins and their receptors are cell adhesion proteins widely distributed in the heart. Fibrin formation is a common feature in myocardial infarction (MI), which plays a critical role in the pathogenesis of left ventricular remodelling and failure. In this study, we sought to assess the effect of ephrin-A2 in the deposition of fibrin and other components during MI in rats. Adult male Sprague-Dawley rats were subjected to left coronary artery ligation. They were divided into 2 groups based on sham surgery (sham group) or 30 min of coronary artery ligation followed by various periods of reperfusion. Histopathology of the heart was assessed by hematoxylin and eosin and Masson's trichrome staining, and cell apoptosis was determined by terminal deoxynucleotidyl transferase-mediated dUTP nick-end-labelling (TUNEL) assay. Ephrin-A2 expression and fibrin deposition were assessed by immunohistochemical and immunofluorescence staining. The expression of Ephrin-A2 and microvessel density (MVD) were detected by Western blot. There was a moderate expression of Ephrin-A2 in sham group, whereas the expression in the MI group was reduced significantly, which was more prominent at the infarct border compared to the remote myocardium. After a reperfusion period of 1 week, there was abundant fibrin deposition in the infarct border zone (IZ) in the MI group, and Ephrin-A2 expression and MVD were higher compared to the sham group. There were significant differences in the expression of Ephrin-A2 and fibrin deposition between the
