Thomas and the Rockland County, N.Y. courthouse is a tale that includes people living in the 1800's, and a group of German-American rebels who battled the county and authorities during the Civil War. According to the NYPL, Thomas was a veteran of the War of 1812. While serving in the New York State Militia he was posted in the town of Newburgh. One day while on patrol, Thomas was shot and killed at the courthouse. At the time of his death, the county seat was located in Newburgh. On October 26, 1860, Judge Francis H. Dodd, was presiding over a trial in the courthouse in Newburgh. In the courtroom, Judge Dodd declared a group of German Americans were rebels. The trial was called "Arrest of Warrants" for "conspiracy to raise an armed body for the public disturbance and annoyance of citizens of this county." At that time, the German-American population in Newburgh was 466, of which 36 were of German descent. The German-Americans known as the "Hunnish Club" were a group of five individuals. The other three were Erastus Froedert, Frederick Ritter, and Rudolph J. Peter (who all lived in East Fishkill, N.Y). The five were charged with conspiring to meet in a camp, acquire arms, and fight against the county. The group was arrested, tried, and found guilty. The judge sentenced all five of them to hang. "Thomas' sudden death was startling news to the community." The incident marked the beginning of a small rebellion among the German-American population. The group appealed the verdict to the U.S. Supreme Court. In an appeal by the five Germans, the court overturned the verdict, acquitted them, and sent them home. In doing so, the justices agreed that there were constitutional protections against the government prosecuting German-Americans for the crimes of their non-white neighbors. Since the arrest

(Sipa/Newscom) By Edward Cody Washington Post Staff Writer Friday, May 18, 2003; Page A05 The CIA was supposed to be neutral in the struggle between Hussein and the U.S.-led coalition. But in the 21st century, even the most idealistic spy service has an obligation to protect itself when the country that employs it is at war. That obligation is driving some CIA officers to defect to Iraq's enemies, according to a Senate report released Thursday. Four officers shared details of classified operations and even a CIA operative's identity. Other CIA employees may have been misled or sold out by fellow officers, a report by the Intelligence Committee said, but "recent indications are that many of these officers have in fact joined pro-Iraqi elements." "The internal group of defect 595f342e71
