The Conclusion Conclusion The Latest From Vapourfi I have many plans for this blog, some of which I will be announcing soon, but I decided to start with the D-Stopppers. These are little project in which I am trying to assemble my various polymer-related products together so I have a more complete collection on my bench. I don't think there is any one particular product that embodies the style of the d-stopper. Rather, all three are very similar. They are small, easy to work with, and display a fantastic finish. The three pieces are the bottom cap, the stem and the dripper. I am currently assembling them all in my bedroom to ensure I get a proper feel for how they work. Last week was it's own learning curve. I was building them as I worked, the only real need for an assembly line is to ensure the parts are precise when you assemble them. I am still working on the four pieces. The dripper is complete and the stem is on the way. Once assembled I'll be sure to share photos. Whew! That's a lot of material. I'll try to keep this short, but this will be a picture heavy post. I have three new smokable varieties; a version of the Oil Head chimney, a new chamber loading variant, and the ClickTape II. The Oil Head is a the oil chimney 1.25, where you use a nail on a 1.25 mm stainless steel or brass screw to screw the chimney in. You don't have to drill or cut anything. All the holes are just made so the nail and screw go in and you have a pretty good seal. The chimney would be perfect for
