Immunotherapy is a major achievement in the treatment of cancer, yet most patients fail to mount an effective immune response. In addition, the use of chemotherapy limits the immune response. Thus, it is clear that combinations of chemotherapy and immunotherapy will play a key role in the treatment of cancer. However, it has proven difficult to use chemotherapy in combination with immunotherapy since the immune system is rapidly suppressed by chemotherapy. In this review, we discuss the immunological characteristics of a variety of anticancer agents that make them effective when used together with immunotherapy, a strategy that we refer to as cytokine-induced neutrophil activation (CINA). CINA is defined as the temporary activation of neutrophils as a part of normal inflammation and antitumor immunity in order to generate a second neutrophil-mediated wave of killing. In some cases, chronic inflammation induced by CINA may result in anticancer immunity. However, the basic physiologic mechanism of CINA remains largely unknown. Much can be learned from the lessons of CINA if the cytokine(s) responsible for CINA are identified. A combination of targeted agents with cytokine production by cancer cells and immune-based therapies with CINA-like neutrophil responses may provide an important strategy to improve anticancer immunity.

Pseudolaval axis: a modification of the classic Laval shunt for aortic valve insufficiency. The classic Laval shunt is a useful treatment of aortic insufficiency. Its application is generally limited to patients with an anatomically normal aortic valve.

There is an ongoing controversy regarding the suitability of this technique for patients with aortic valve disease. We have modified the classic Laval shunt 648931e174

On February 13, Afghan and U.S. forces found the briefcase and trigger box in a home in Mazar-i-Sharif that is allegedly owned by local Taliban commander Abdul Haq Wazir, reports the Los Angeles Times. Wazir is wanted by the International Criminal Court for directing the October 2001 bombings that killed more than 4,000 people in Kabul. The briefcase was found in Wazir's courtyard. The briefcase was discovered near a dead Taliban commander whose hands had been severed, according to the report. The briefcase had a chamber for containing the nuclear trigger, two pipe tubes, and a five-liter bottle filled with ammonium nitrate fertilizer, Reuters reports. A U.S. official told Reuters, "The tube and the bottle are the parts of an improvised nuclear device." The Kabul Times, a local Afghan news outlet, reported that a "senior
