Is the activation hardware for the engine of BMW M2 supposed to be the same in every variant? My guess is that the engine ECU is programmed by the manufacturer with a specific OBD-2 port that works only in a specific engine model. So for example in the M2 I can use the BCM-USB-CLIENT-OBDD2 adapter found in the dealer to test the ECU using an INPA-USB protocol. But I cannot use the INPA-KW only OBD-2 adapter for another BMW engine. And vice versa, if I load a specific ECU OBD-2 IP code into the BCM-USB-CLIENT-OBDD2 adapter, the engine is working but no matter what I try to do it only works in the "specific" engine variant. A: There is quite a few keys, but you can use any key to start the vehicle, except the BMW key.

This should be the factory key or the dealer key. There are many more keys than shown in BMW vehicles, as in some some vehicles the key can only start the OBD2-bus and display a lot of log information. The vehicle can be driven without any key.
