On May 21th, 1974 the University of Ferrara conferred the title of Doctor Honoris causa in honor of the famous scientist Prof. Prof. Maiorano has been chosen as Excellent Professor with just in time. It is well known that the one that has many talented people in his staff is the way of success. The criteria used for the awards that are distributed on an annual basis are the same as those used in the other institutions. We have made our choice for this reason. The criteria to be considered, as well as the methods used to evaluate the work, were subjected to the collaboration of the Chair of Professors Luigi Gambarotta and Andrea Tralli. Before the winning staff can be considered for the awards, the following conditions have to be fulfilled: 1) an outstanding contribution to the course of study, Prof. Giuseppe Maiorano the head of Department of Infectious Diseases has been his Chair since 1982. In addition to the scientific activity, he is very active in hospital activities, being particularly dedicated to the control of infectious diseases. His research activity as well as his ideas have always impressed his colleagues and the staff of the Department. It is thanks to his constant striving for improvement that the quality of the activity of the Department has been constantly improving. Prof. Maiorano has been the head of the Department of Infectious Diseases of the University of Ferrara since 1982. This specialization is reflected in the scientific production of the Department. Since 1982 the Department of Infectious Diseases has cultivated an outstanding research activity, not the least because the teaching staff are always ready to help their students with the best advanced technologies available in the field. The transfer of scientific knowledge to the staff is very important, allowing them to develop their ideas and experiments, even if they are outside their area of activity. Furthermore, the staff have a very wide view of the different activities carried out in the fields of science, medicine and philosophy. At the same time, the staff are active in the international level since some of them have been trained abroad and have been working and publishing their work in prestigious scientific journals. PREMIUM VIEW DESTINED TO VIEWERS WHO ARE NOT 'CURATED BUYERS' - GOODRisk factors for bloodstream infection caused by nosocomial methicillin-resistant Staphylococcus aureus (MRSA) in paediatric intensive care units. Limited information on paediatric bloodstream infection (BSI) due to methicillin-resistant Staphylococcus aureus (MRSA) is available. To identify risk factors for paediatric MRSA BSI in intensive care units (ICU). Retrospective case-control study using an ICU database. Hospital A, a tertiary-care university teaching hospital; hospital B, a paediatric ICU in the same hospital; and hospital C, a tertiary-care non-university teaching hospital. All episodes of paediatric patients with MRSA BSI in the four hospitals from 1 January 2011 to 31 December 2012 were compared to matched controls. Cases and controls were compared by multivariable logistic regression for risk factors for paediatric BSI caused by MRSA. Of the 677 cases, 208 (30.9%) were due to hospital A, 61 (8.9%) due to hospital B, and 388 (56.2%) due to hospital C. Children with MRSA BSI differed from matched controls in ICU factors as follows: fewer mechanical ventilator-free days (1 vs. 10, P
