Microsoft has released a series of new updates for the operating systems on which they operate. These updates are normally centered around bug fixes and improvements to make the user experience on Windows, Office, Silverlight, and other Microsoft products more reliable. This update helps bring Windows Phone 8 closer to Windows 8, the next generation of Windows. Many of the things that were introduced in Windows Phone 8 are now being made available to Windows Phone 7 users as well. This includes things like the new app launcher and the new Windows Phone power button. Perhaps the most important part of this update is the introduction of the Windows Phone 8 update for the Nokia Lumia 920 phone. This update is designed to offer improved navigation, camera pictures, enhanced touch response and more. I have already written about all of these new features in my previous blog so I do not cover them in this blog entry. The operating system itself is quite significant. This is the first time in about three years that a major upgrade of Windows has been made available. This is also one of the first major upgrades since Windows 7 was released. Many Windows Phone 7 phones could not run apps that are created for Windows 8. Windows Phone 8 makes it possible to now create and run apps that are designed for the Windows 8 operating system. Another major advantage of Windows Phone 8 is that it is now possible to create different editions of the operating system that are specific to each country. The different editions are called language packs. Windows Phone 8 includes these language packs, but they were not available to the public for a long time. Windows Phone 8 is also set to work better with the following Windows 8 devices: Tablet Netbook Laptop Helicopter

Windows Phone 8 Includes: New app launcher Windows Phone power button New touch responsiveness Visual enhancements MTP file handling Wi-Fi Bluetooth 3.0 DirectX 10.1 MIDP 3.0 Improved Kies
